Which is more important to us?

Let's read !

When Albert Einstein, the world-famous scientist, first came to America, he always wore an old overcoat. His worn out overcoat and the fancy New York City just didn't match.

Who was Albert Einstein? What was wrong with Einstein's overcoat?

One day Einstein came across an old friend in the street. "Mr. Einstein," said the friend, "it seems that you need a new overcoat. Look at the hole in the elbow!" Einstein replied, "It doesn't matter. Nobody here knows me."

Did Einstein want to get a new overcoat? Why?

Years later, when Einstein first became a world-famous scientist, he met his friend again. “Mr. Einstein, you are still wearing your old overcoat! But you are a big man now!”

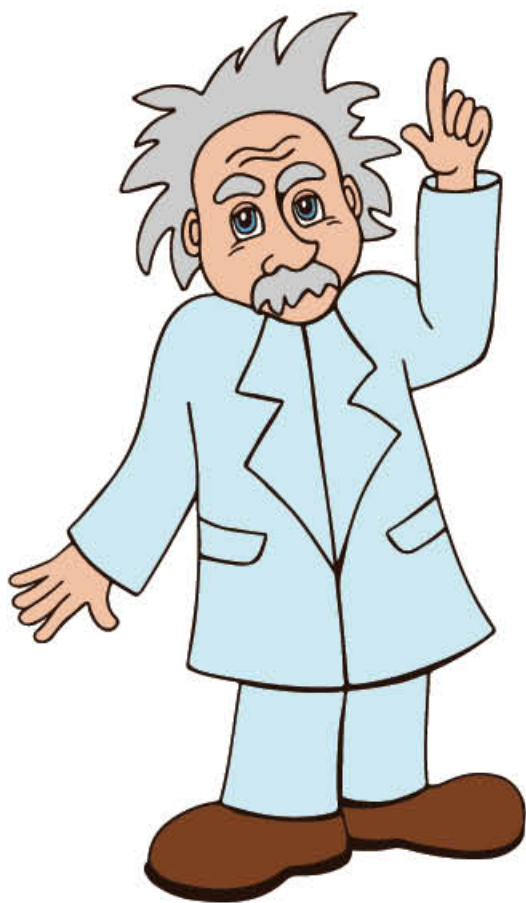

What was Einstein wearing when he met his friend again years later?

Once more his friend tried to persuade him to buy a new overcoat. But Einstein said, "There's no need now. Everybody here knows me."

Why did Einstein say there was no need to buy a new overcoat?

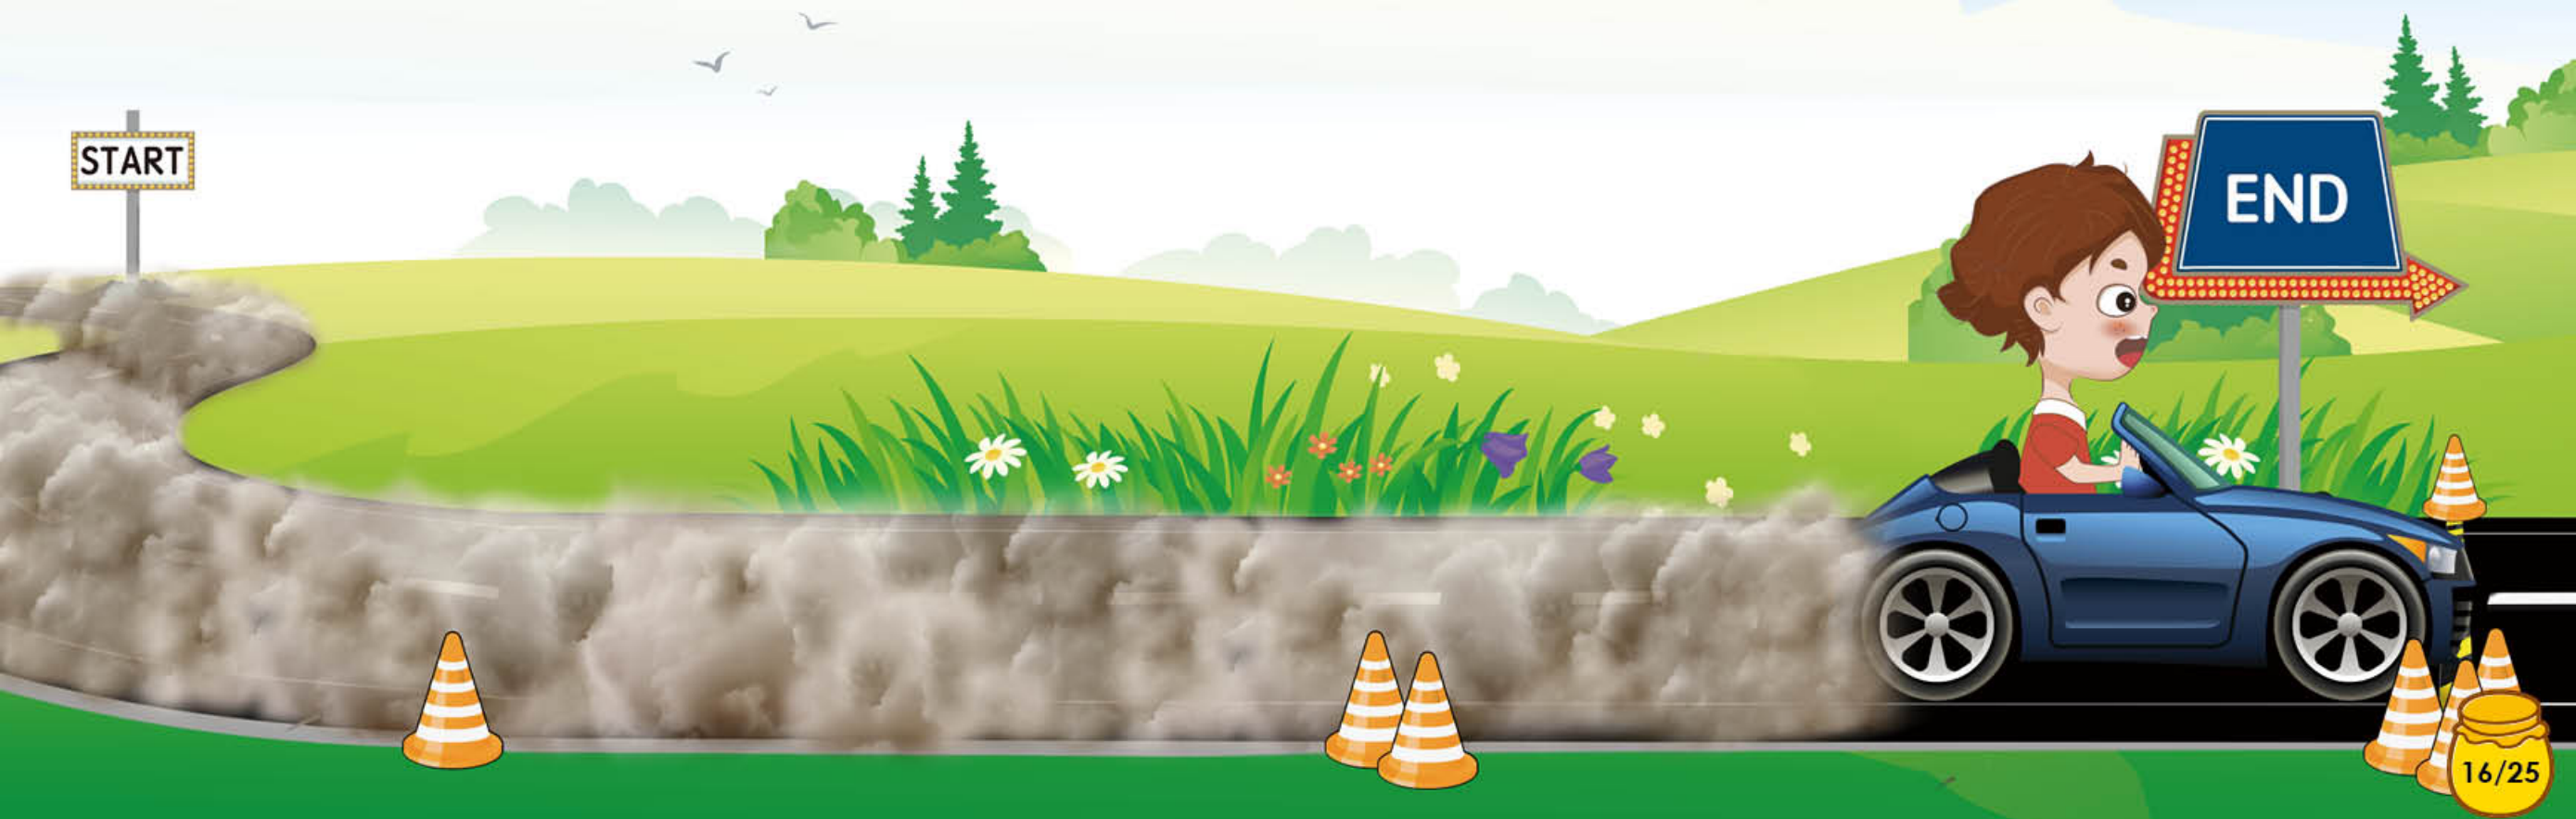

His friend nodded and said, "Oh, now I understand. What people do is more important than what people wear."

Einstein's work has helped make our world a better place. That's the important thing.

What did his friend understand?

In this lesson, you learned: what people do is more important than what people wear.

There is an example on the next page.

Example

Years ago

When Einstein first came to America, he wore an old overcoat. He didn't want a new one, because nobody knew him there.

Years later

Einstein became a world-famous scientist. He was still wearing the overcoat. He thought it was OK, because everyone knew him.

Actually, what people do is more important than what people wear.
