But wait! Before you start, it's always important to know something about the US copyright law when downloading music. The law says that it's illegal to download any music that's been used without permission. "What if the music I downloaded is not copyrighted?" In that case, you might get in trouble as well, but don't worry about that. Here are some useful tips for you to follow when downloading from the Internet.

1. Make sure to sign up before you download. Amazon.com and iTunes Store are your first and best choices. They are the most popular places to purchase and download music online. What's more, they are both easy to sign up. Once you have signed yourself up, you're free to browse all their collections. Amazon.com has more than 20 million songs to purchase, while iTunes' user-friendly interface makes it a great choice for young people.

2. Never forget to browse "Daily Deals."

"What if I don't know what to listen to or I don't have enough money?" That's OK. We all know that Amazon.com and the iTunes Store sometimes offer sales on some songs or albums. You might find collections of older music or interesting albums from artists you might never have heard of only for pennies.

3. Pay for the music and download.

Once you have logged in, paying for the music will be very easy: just click to download the songs or the entire album you want and complete the process with a payment. As soon as you finish that, the music will be downloaded quickly onto your computer and you can play it wherever and however loud you like for the rest of your life.
