READING COMPREHENSION

One day, Timmy and his classmates played a new game called "Tennis Relay." The players were told to balance a tennis ball on a racket, and then run to their teammates and pass on the ball. The team that got to the finish line first would win.

What was the name of the new game?

An illustration of three children playing tennis on a red track in a park. A boy with orange hair is in the foreground, swinging a racket. A girl with brown hair and red glasses is behind him, also holding a racket. A boy with a purple cap is in the background. The track is red with white lines. There are green trees and bushes in the background.

If the ball fell off the racket, the player needed to go back and start again. It was not easy for the children. The balls fell off over and over again, making the kids run back and forth. They were tired, but they really enjoyed it.

What did they need to do if the ball fell off?

No cheating!

When it was Timmy's turn, he put the ball onto his racket, but it fell off. So he held the racket with his right hand and the ball with his left hand, and then he started to run. "No cheating, Timmy!" shouted Fred. "You shouldn't hold the ball."

Why did Fred say Timmy was cheating?

Timmy put the ball back onto the racket and ran forward quickly. But then he realized that he should go back and start again. Everybody began to cheer for him. "Go for it, Timmy!"

Why did Timmy go back and start again?

As it took quite long for Timmy to finish, his team lost the game. Timmy felt a little upset and said sorry to the other kids. But the other kids thought he did a great job, because he corrected his mistakes and stopped cheating.

Why did the other kids think Timmy did a good job?
