GENREFactual text – Explanation

Explanations are texts that explain how or why something happens using facts or information.

Example:

Charades is a popular party game. In this game, a participant has to pick a paper with a word. Then, he or she has to act to help the other participants guess the word. The other participants have to guess within a certain time period.

Circle the correct information.

The passage is about (charades, musical chairs). It is an example of a factual text – (persuasive text, explanation) because it explains (how, why) something happens using (imaginary events, facts).

SCAVENGER HUNT

A scavenger hunt is a fun game you can play at a party. If you've never done a scavenger hunt before, here's how you play.

Before a scavenger hunt starts, the game's organizer gives the participants a list.

What does the game's organizer give before the game starts?

This list has items the participants have to find. The organizer then informs the participants where the items are. Some items may be easy to locate, like a rake, while others are hard to find, like a ladybug.

What is on the list?

The scavenger hunt begins when the organizer gives a signal. Everybody then starts to look for the items at the same time. The first participant to find every item on the list, wins.

When does a scavenger hunt begin?

Another version of this game is called the treasure hunt. Treasure hunts and scavenger hunts are the same except for two important differences.

First of all, the things you find in a treasure hunt are the actual prizes you get while the things in a scavenger hunt are usually neither useful nor interesting, like a leaf or a weed. The prize you win in a scavenger hunt is something not on the list, and the winner receives it after the game.

What is a treasure hunt?

The second difference is that in a treasure hunt, you have to find the items in the order they are written down on the list. On the other hand, you don't have to follow the order on the list when you are on a scavenger hunt.

Be it a scavenger or a treasure hunt, the most important part of the game is for the participants to have fun!

In what order should you find the items in a treasure hunt?
