How you learned: During the three months, my friends showed me around to experience life in Britain.

What you learned: In this way, I got to know the differences between China and Britain. The thing which left me the deepest impression is the open markets culture. Some open markets are on the square of city center, some are in the park, and some are even in the subway station, which is banned in China. I am quite familiar with TYNEMOUTH (a small coastal town in Newcastle) markets. The TYNEMOUTH subway station offers vast covered space for famous markets every weekend. Visitors come all over the place to enjoy the open markets and check out the goods..
