When the Ambassador of Escalopia^{an imaginary country} returned home for lunch, his wife got a shock. He looked pale and his clothes were in a frightful state.

“What has happened?” she asked. “How did your clothes get into such a mess?”

“A fire extinguisher, my dear,” answered the Ambassador drily. “University students set the Embassy on fire this morning.”

① “Good heavens!” exclaimed his wife. “And where were you at the time?”

“I was in my office as usual,” answered the Ambassador. “The fire broke out in the basement.”

1. “Good heavens!” exclaimed his wife.

➤ “good heavens” or “heavens”: used to express surprise or to emphasize that you agree or disagree with sb.

E.g. (1) Good heavens! That explained a lot!

(2) Good heavens! How can you be so stupid?

(3) Heavens! Where did you know that?

I went down immediately, of course, and that fool, Horst, aimed a fire extinguisher at me. He thought I was on fire. ^[2] I must definitely get that fellow posted."

The Ambassador's wife went on asking questions, when she suddenly noticed a big hole in her husband's hat.

"And how can you explain that?" she asked.

"Oh, that," said the Ambassador. "Someone fired a shot through my office window.

Accurate, don't you think? Fortunately, I wasn't wearing it at the time. If I had been, I would not have been able to get home for lunch."

2. I must get that fellow posted.

= I must send that fellow working elsewhere.

➤ (sb.) be posted somewhere: be sent to work somewhere else by the organization sb. works for

E.g. (1) After training, she was posted to New York.

(2) It is normal to spend two or three years working in this country before being posted overseas.
