

JOURNEY to the WEST 103

The Land of the West

Wukong leaned over the coffin and recited a spell.

Squire Kou sat up and smiled. “Thank you, Wukong.”

The next morning they let the travelers leave without any argument.

One day the road went into a beautiful land.

Look up ahead,” said Wujing, pointing to a row of tall buildings.

At the gate the monk got down from his horse.

A young man greeted them.

The Tang Monk bowed. “Forgive me.

I wanted to arrive much sooner.

Bajie snorted and splashed water at Wukong.

The monkey splashed back. Everyone laughed.

The travelers enjoyed a large meal with the immortal.

Wukong put his hand on the monk' s shoulder.

“That’ s the Spirit Mountain, Master.

The travelers thanked the immortal.
