

JOURNEY to the WEST 104

The Tang Monk and the River

Wukong and his companions walked through the Western Paradise.

The travelers soon arrived at a river with a strong current.

The monkey pointed upstream.

A thin log lay across the river.

The monkey hopped onto the log and ran across the river and back.

“Follow me, Master,” said Wukong.
He pulled the Tang Monk toward the log.

Just then an old man appeared in a boat.
“I can take you across the river,” said the man.

With a bit more hesitation,
the Tang Monk stepped into the boat.

The Tang Monk looked at the water and saw a body floating downstream.

The Tang Monk looked at the body more carefully.

As they walked up the slope of the Spirit Mountain,
the Tang Monk laughed in amazement.
