Model 1

For what: I am going to talk about the time when I was late for a basketball match. Although three years has passed, I could still remember it clearly.

When: It happened when I was a freshman at my university. I was on the school basketball team at that time and our school was having a competition with another school on a Sunday morning. My father was driving me to school that day.

Why: Unfortunately, a bad accident happened on the way, so we got stuck in the traffic jam. By the time I got the gym, the game had started without me. After this experience, whenever I have something important, I always try to arrive early.

How important: Being punctual is an important quality, which makes people reliable and make friends with others easily.

Model 2

For what and when: It was at the beginning of this semester, I was late for my first math class in the morning, which was really an embarrassing experience in my life.

Why: And regarding why I was late, well, it was mainly due to the fact that I overslept. I didn't hear my alarm go off that morning, so I somehow overslept. And when I finally got to the classroom, I found that the back door of the classroom was locked. I had to enter the classroom through the front door. It was really embarrassing that everyone saw me walk in late. Now, I try my best to be punctual all the time.

How important: In my opinion, to be punctual is very important. It shows your respect for others. In turn, you can acquire respect from others.
