Do many foreigners speak your native language?

Well, frankly speaking I am not quite sure. I know some foreigners can speak my native language Chinese, and some can speak it fluently, but I don't know exactly how many can speak it.

How important is your native language in the world today?

I can't say that Chinese is extremely important in the world nowadays, but personally speaking, the importance of Chinese has increased greatly over the years. The main reason is that a large number of foreign businessmen are making investments in China in order to make money, so it's necessary for them to understand Chinese.

Do you think your native language is easier than English?

Yes, I do think so because Chinese grammar is not as complicated as English. For example, unlike English, you don't need to remember the rules of tenses in Chinese.

Shorten your answer to 2-3 sentences. It's easier to get 5.5.
