Model 1

What and where: The language I've always wanted to learn is Japanese. As a student, I don't have enough money to pay for a specific course, so I would like to learn it through self-study.

How you would learn it: In order to do it well, it's necessary to know the basic 50 Japanese characters. Firstly, I would download elementary study material from a Japanese learning forum to learn how to pronounce the words. In addition, I would probably put spare time into memorizing vocabulary, key sentences and structures to build up my language competence. After learning a number of words and sentences, I would find a language partner from the forum to practice my speaking skills.

Why: The reason I want to learn Japanese is very simple. I'm a big fan of Japanese animation and comic books. I hope one day I can watch Japanese animation without referring to the Chinese subtitles and understand the content completely.

Model 2

What and where: I would say French is a language I've always wanted to learn. As I have to work every day, I don't have time to take a French course at a school, so I'd probably just take an online course at home.

How you would learn it: I would design a practical plan to start my learning. Firstly, I will register for a well-known online French course and then choose its beginner course. Through several online lessons, I would be able to grasp basic French pronunciation and vocabulary. While taking the online course, I will spend some time practicing what I learn in the course with my personal tutor.

Why: It has always been my dream to further my studies in France, so I have to learn French beforehand. If I can master this language well, it will be more convenient for me in my future studies.

You are required to talk for the full 2 minutes.

3. Imagine you are a candidate in the IELTS test. The teacher is an examiner. Please answer the questions below with what you have learned to develop your IELTS answers. (9 mins)
