Model 1

What: One of the most influential inventions before the age of computers was the telephone.

When and where: It was invented by an American scientist named Alexander Graham Bell. In 1875, Bell was doing an experiment in a telegraphic receiver room while his assistant was testing telegraphy in another room. Suddenly, Bell noticed a wave on an iron strip. This historic observation led to the birth of the telephone.

How it is used: Today it is used widespread for both interpersonal and business communication in the world. If you miss someone, you can call them to express your feelings and deepen your relationship. Also, in business, telephone communication allows people to discuss matters quickly and directly, which breaks geographical barriers.

How it influenced us: It has changed our way of communication greatly. Today, nearly every country has a vast network of telephone lines. No matter where we live, we can be connected to others.

Model 2

What: There are many inventions that have influenced human society before the digital age. Among all the inventions, I think the plane is the most important one, so I would like to talk about it.

When and where: In 1903, the Wright brothers invented the first plane in America successfully. They never imagined that their invention would bring about a revolution to the world's transportation system.

How: Nowadays, airplanes are mainly used for travelling and for the transportation of commodities across long distances. Besides, some planes are designed for military use. For example, a combat aircraft is designed to destroy enemy equipment.

How: As a plane can carry people or goods over a long distance in a fairly short time, it has influenced our society in two major aspects. The first one is that it makes it easier for people to travel around the world. The second aspect is that it quickens the arrival of packages and ensures they arrive safely, which brings much convenience to people's life.

You are required to talk for the full 2 minutes.
