Model 2

What, when and where: I would like to describe a TV commercial which I saw at home a few days ago. This was a shoe commercial of Converse.

What content: In this advertisement, a young man rushed to the airport in a taxi, hopped onto an airplane and flew to another city for a job interview. Having arrived at the office building, he looked down at his shoes, only to notice that they didn't match at all. He completed the interview anyway. The businessman seemed very disappointed. He looked sadly at his mismatched shoes. All of a sudden, his mobile phone rang-he got the job. He was so excited and jumped into the air. Then the narrator said calmly, "Converse can always take you there."

Why: This advertisement was really full of creativity. It conveyed the idea that Converse shoes were not only shoes, but also a tool to make one's dreams come true. I was deeply impressed by this creativity.

You are required to talk for the full 2 minutes.

There are many difficulties I encounter in my studies, for example, I can't remember English words, and I find it difficult to deal with maths problems.

The course that I dislike most is physics. It is quite boring and difficult. I often feel sleepy when I have physics classes and I usually get low marks on my physics exams.

To a certain extent, advertising does help publicize a product. However, it is the quality of goods and people's need that truly determine whether a good is popular or not.
