Model 1

What and why: It was about four years ago, I was a freshman at my university. Every semester, we had to write many papers. During the process of writing my papers, I found that my typing skills were too poor; in fact, I was wasting most of my time just typing things in. As a result, I decided to take a three-week typing course.

What extent: Our instructor was a quite young secretary who could type up to 110 words a minute. She taught us how to type without looking at the keyboard. Her teaching method involved calling out individual letters while we quickly typed them without looking at the keyboard. In addition, she required us to practice the typing skills she taught us at least one hour every day.

What you learned: After the course I was able to type at about 100 words per minute, which was enough to finish my assignment in a short time. I felt very happy that my typing skill improved.
