Model 1

What it was about: Last Friday, I finished a short course for accounting. At the end of the last class, our teacher asked us to do a survey. The survey was about the quality of teaching, the teaching materials given at classes and our overall opinions about this course.

Why: The teacher wanted to improve this short course. He thought the opinions from students would be helpful, so he asked all the students attending this short course for help.

What opinions you gave: In this survey, I gave some suggestions that I thought could make the course even better. For instance, the business school should offer the course more often and teachers should be more patient during classes.

How you felt: I was very happy to give my opinions. I strongly believe questionnaires are a good tool to improve service and identify the strengths of a service. Hence, based on the information collected in this survey, I believed teachers of this course would make certain improvements accordingly, which would be very beneficial for future students.
