Model 1

When: Last week I was caught in a terrible traffic jam on my way to work. I left early on a Monday morning so that I could specifically avoid the usual traffic.

Where and how: I was travelling along nicely on my normal route, when suddenly a few meters up ahead of me a car crashed into another. The accident on the road caused every car behind the crash to pile up one on top of the other. The resulting accident caused a major traffic jam that lasted hours. Caught in the terrible traffic jam, I had nothing to do but wait anxiously and helplessly.

How you spent: While waiting in my car, I decided to practice what I would say during the presentation I was going to give in the afternoon. I managed to thoroughly revise my notes and ended up correcting a lot of the mistakes I had made in the data. Around three hours later, the traffic finally cleared. Although getting stuck in a traffic jam was an unhappy experience, due to this experience, I succeeded in giving the best presentation I had ever given before, so I know everything has two sides.
