Model 2

What: Sashimi is a Japanese delicacy that I would like to sample.

How you know: The first time I heard about sashimi was in my world culture class in elementary school. My teacher told us that sashimi is made from raw fish, such as salmon or tuna. I was astonished because I always assumed that raw food would probably be disgusting.

Where: In an ideal world, I would travel to Japan so that I could taste this dish. However, due to financial limitations I will have to settle for a well-known Japanese restaurant in my area.

Why: I feel like trying the dish for two primary reasons. Firstly, it has never occurred to me that raw fish could be the essence of Japanese cuisine. Despite being uncooked, sashimi manages to maintain a rich and salty flavor, which is to my liking. The pictures of sashimi amused me the first time I saw them in a magazine. Since then, I have been trying to figure out if its tastes is as good as it looks, which happens to be another reason that I'd like to try this dish.

You are required to talk for the full 2 minutes.

Key words and key sentences

time-consuming

 Example: The first reason for people to do so is that it's time-consuming to prepare and cook at home, especially for those who are on a tight schedule. Instead, eating at restaurants saves a lot of time. The other important reason may be that there is always a wide variety of choices to pick from when it comes to where and what type of food people want to eat.

critic

 Example: If money were not an issue, I'd prefer to eat at five-star restaurants rather than small street restaurants. The main reason is that five-star restaurants are rated by professional food critics and therefore I think they have higher quality and better tasting food. Also, the service received at this type of restaurant would be superb, which would make the whole eating experience enjoyable.

take sth. into consideration

 Example: There are two main factors that influence my decision. The first one is whether the restaurants have appetizing food as well as a pleasant atmosphere and amazing service. The second factor that I take into consideration is cleanliness. In other words, there should be clean silverware and absolutely no offensive odours.

When I work out, for example, I prefer to wear loose clothes because it allows for a fuller range of motion.

I can also imagine that uniforms provide less of a distraction in the workplace by limiting the amount of bright colours that are worn.

Based on my observation, most men have become more casual. Many choose comfortable clothes, normally in black, blue or grey.
