Model 2

What the music is: A piece of music that has forever remained with me is Rachmaninov's Twenty-four Variations on the Theme of Paganini.

Where you first heard it: I first heard this classical composition when I was researching musical pieces to write an analysis on in high school. I remember clearly I was sitting at my desk in my bedroom when I came across this particular bit of music and I immediately fell in love with it.

Why you like it: This piano concerto is a chilling yet brilliant masterpiece of conjoined musical notes. The music starts off with a bang with the usual frantic dexterity Rachmaninov is famous for. I suppose what I really like most about it is the way the artist cleverly takes this popular tune and inverts it to form something that is eerily familiar yet with a completely different touch added to it. I enjoy the subtle and gentle beginning that characterises classical pieces. To me this type of classical music encompasses the language of nature and the natural beauty found in all things. Overall, I love this piece because it re-imagines an already famous song putting a new twist on the sound and bringing it into the modern era. It shows that music has a kind of evolution to it and can change to suit different time periods; this is the beauty of this piece.

What do you think influences a young person's taste in music?

There are many factors that contribute to young people's taste in music. I believe that friends have the biggest impact on what young people prefer to listen to, as younger minds are far easier to influence than mature ones. Another factor that influences a youngster's taste in music is more traditional: radio and television. Through effective advertisements and a constant barrage of music, these two types of media are able to alter impressionable youth's tastes in music.

How has technology affected the kinds of music popular with young people?

Technology as it relates to music normally influences music types popular with young people in the following ways. First, the invention of portable music players has given a new generation the ability to listen to a larger variety of music, such as pop music, rock-and-roll, or even American country music. In the past when there were no such devices, people only had access to a limited number of music types. Also, a tool known as the auto-tune has the ability to make the vocalists sing perfectly and thus allows youngsters to enjoy more music that involves greater complexity.
