Key words and key sentences

be allergic to

 Example: To be honest, I don't like to have flowers in my home. I'm allergic to pollen. Flowers and their pollen irritate my skin, and unfailingly give me a runny nose and cause my eyes to water. So I try to avoid flowers at all times if possible, especially in my own home.

 Example: I give flowers to my friends, relatives and many others when I visit their homes. According to Chinese tradition, it's impolite to visit a person's home empty-handed. I personally choose to give flowers, which is usually seen as typical, but it is still quite well-received.

 Example: In our culture, flowers are very important. They are valued for pleasing both the eyes and nose. Also, flowers have symbolic meaning beyond their appearance and scent. The most obvious examples would be red roses symbolising love and passion, while lotus flowers convey purity.

Model 1

When and where: Frankly speaking, I haven't attended many meetings in my life. However, among all the meetings I've been to, the one I went to three years ago is worth talking about. This meeting was about food quality at our school's canteen, and it was held in the meeting room of my school's administration building.

Who: At the beginning of the new semester, several students complained about the canteen's poor hygiene and its awful food. To solve this problem, the manager of the canteen held a meeting and invited the student representatives to give suggestions — I was one of them.

What: During the meeting, while expressing our opinions about the canteen's problems, we put forward some suggestions which we believed could help improve the quality of meals there. The canteen supervisor listened to us carefully throughout the whole meeting and kept taking notes.

Why: After one week, the food at the canteen improved significantly. As one of the attendees, I felt proud that I was involved in this meeting, and came up with workable solutions which were successfully carried out. I guess that's the main reason why I can still remember attending this meeting.
