

JOURNEY to the WEST 89

Many Eyes

Wukong gasped as his companions began to look ill.

Just then a door burst open,
and the three women ran into the room.

When smoke cleared,
a dead spider lay where one of the women had been.

“Those spider spirits were my dear friends!”
cried the priest.

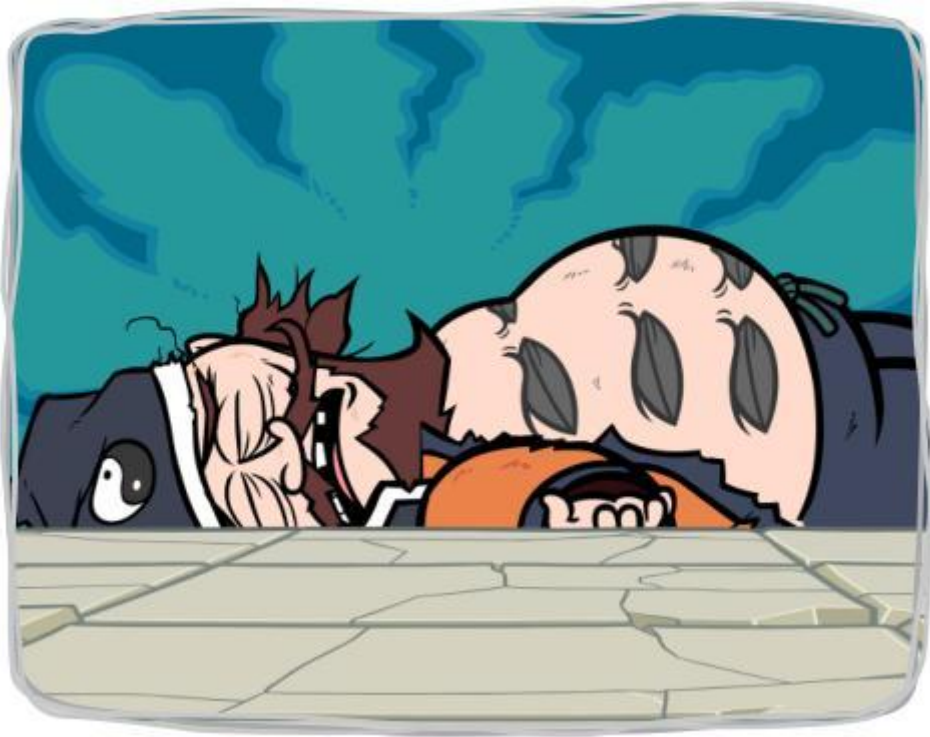

A huge hole opened up.

The monkey jumped in and turned into a mole.

The monkey looked up.

A tall woman was standing over him.

The priest lay shaking on the floor.

All of his eyes were squeezed shut.

Pralambra took a bottle out of her sleeve.

“Here, Wukong,” said the bodhisattva.

The journey continued, and many weeks went by.

Just then a man appeared up ahead.

He was waving his arms frantically.
