Model 2

Who: Fangli Bai was a respected elderly pedicab driver who helped hundreds of students. He was given great honour through media reports when he died in 2005.

Where: Mr Bai spent most of his life in Tianjin, a city near Beijing. He helped hundreds of school children there.

How: I learned about Mr. Bai through a TV programme that highlights those who do good deeds all over China. In 2004, Mr Bai appeared on this show, which put him in the national spotlight and briefly made him famous.

What: Mr. Bai helped three hundred students finish their studies by spending every penny he saved in the last twenty years covering their tuition fees. Most of the students who received his financial aid ended up graduating from college. Although Mr. Bai never went to school, he believed it was vital to get a proper education. He dedicated himself to providing an education to rural children so that they can improve their own lives using what they've learned. I admire the fact that he sacrificed his time and money in order to assist the needy.

注: pedicab 三轮车

You are required to talk for the full 2 minutes.

Key words and key sentences

stricken

Example: The area in which I reside has many different types of health and education related services. These are either government or privately funded services. Specifically, there is a free health clinic for the poverty stricken. Although these services are sufficient, I believe the available care for the poor is insufficient, especially since there are so few facilities dedicated to their cause.

thus

Example: In a community, I think the people who are most likely to live in poverty, and thus require financial support, are the elderly, rural folk who've recently been urbanised, and those with chronic medical conditions. These people are most likely to lack the skills to support themselves in present society, and thus are the ones most likely in need of support.

finance

Example: In my view, this answer depends almost entirely on the type of service. Public services, such as education, emergency services, and electricity etc., should all be financed by the government. The individual should have the final decision as to pay for extra services if needed.

注: urbanise 城镇化 chronic medical conditions 患有慢性疾病的

Currently, many people have been relying on cars to get to work. However, this is causing both health problems and increased traffic.

Elderly people may suffer from weakening of the bones, which could lead to serious consequences if they fell.

Bicycles are less expensive, provide a way to conveniently exercise while commuting, and are less likely to be caught in a traffic jam compared to cars.

Although these services are sufficient, I believe the available care for the poor to be insufficient, especially since there are so few facilities dedicated to this cause.
